LANGUAGE MEANS BUSINESS.

Language means business. Training in English and world languages impacts businesses at almost every level—from workplace safety to customer service, global communications to talent management, and ultimately profitability.

Language learning drives profit. Globalization has changed the face of business, yet English remains the most common language of the global marketplace. Language-learning research revealed that 77% of execs surveyed said funding English language training increases their profitability by approximately 25%.¹

Workforces become increasingly diverse as organizations expand internationally. In fact, 70% of the Global 1000 workforce is non-native English speakers, according to the World Trade Organization.²

Language skills impact success abroad. 75% of expat assignments fail, costing companies $3.5 million for every $5 million they invest—due largely to language barriers.³

Language training benefits business.

Language proficiency is a strategically important business skill, yet only 33% of executives in a 2013 survey believe their global network of employees communicates effectively in different languages.⁴ Language training can help solve these business challenges.

Expand market share. The fastest-growing markets with the greatest long-term potential are in developing economies and in multicultural market segments at home—markets that often do not speak English.

Increase customer retention. It's essential to provide consistent service and support in languages that your international and domestic customers speak. Language training increases your ability to create positive customer experiences.

Improve productivity. Internal language barriers reduce collaboration, impacting your bottom line. 70% of employees in a 2013 survey found learning a language at work improved their creativity, productivity, and job satisfaction.⁵ Language training tailored to your specific needs builds cross-team success.

Engage and retain top talent. Forty percent of employees who rate their companies' training opportunities as poor planned to leave the company within a year. Where employees rated training opportunities as "excellent," only 12% of employees said they planned to leave the company.⁶

Keep employees safe. Workforce diversity increases language and communication barriers—and the risk of on-the-job injuries. Language training helps companies reduce risks and costs related to injuries, turnover, and compliance violations.

Foster diversity and inclusion. Enabling your diverse workforce to communicate with one another by speaking each other's language means fostering openness and respect.

Rosetta Stone® Language Learning Suite solutions provide understandable and engaging lessons—a proven combination for effective language learning.

- Gaining language proficiency requires a lot of practice. We have created engaging environments that enable learners to revisit concepts without getting bored.
- Learners are much more likely to remember material when they actively think about it. Our solutions guide learners to think deeply, rather than superficially, about the concepts they are learning.
- Learners need a lot of exposure to a language while learning, and it must be understandable and engaging—and delivered at an appropriate difficulty level based on the learner's proficiency. Our solutions provide content that is relevant to the objective being learned, so that activities remain within each learner's range of abilities.
- Language is inherently social, and learners develop proficiency by actively engaging in conversation. Our solutions offer opportunities to include live instruction with a tutor or mentor to foster the creative production of language.
